Localizing SDG 5.2: Planning and paying for local action plans to end gender-based violence

The ambitious targets set by the SDGs demand new approaches, ways of working together and modes of financing. This includes ensuring that international commitments and national strategies are translated into improvements in the lives of people all over the globe. Local communities have a unique role to play – as they are most familiar with the contexts in which they live, they are best placed to define not only local development priorities but also community-driven solutions.

This event will explore how participatory planning at the community level can localize and help achieve SDG target 5.2: eliminate all forms of violence against all women and girls in the public and private spheres, including trafficking and sexual and other types of exploitation ending gender-based violence (GBV). The conversation will be rooted in initial findings from UNDP's "Ending GBV and Achieving the SDGs" global project, which is piloting participatory local action plans to prevent and address GBV in Indonesia, Moldova and Peru.

KEY DISCUSSANTS INCLUDE:

- Dr. Erin Stern, Technical Lead for Participatory Action Plans to Address GBV, UNDP
- Dr. Michelle Remme, Research Fellow at the United Nations University's International Institute for Global Health (UNU-IIGH) (remote participation)
- UNICEF (TBC)
- Huairou Commission (TBC)
